The twins were excited. Finally, after months of cleaning and packing, they were moving into their new home. Boxes lay in a neat pile in the hall of their old home, full of their clothes, toys and books. When the removal van arrived, they helped the big and burly movers carry the lighter boxes to the van. The movers carried the heavy stuff like the sofa and cupboards. Their parents were busy giving instructions to the movers. Finally, they were on their way to the new home.

Jim and Jerry loved their new house. Not only did they not have to share a room anymore, the new house also had a small grassy area at the back. They needn't go to the park to have a game of football anymore! Their new house was just a few blocks away from their school and they could cycle to school every day. That beats having to take the bus, which they had to do before moving into the new house. The boys were sure they would be happy in their new house.

2. Why were they excited?
3. Who carried the heavy stuff?
4. Where were the twins used to play football?
